The Chinese say that an ancient writer wrote 5400 poems, and another 5400 songs and 300 novels. This means, essentially, that all of Chinese literature is contained in some form of poetry. In the West, poetry is taught much as music was taught in the Middle Ages, and it has been largely neglected. The only poets taught today are dead, and even these are taught like dead languages in high schools and colleges. ("There once was a poetry professor," goes the jingle. I have used that joke many times.) Hence, we are in the embarrassing state that we have no current poetry except for a few poets and poets-in-training who might yet change the situation. As someone has written: Among the many unhappy inconveniences of being civilized is that a man must not only pay taxes in money but taxes in the spoils of poetry and thought. Also, among the many areas of psychology that are particularly difficult to study, it is unusual to find that there is a surplus of techniques for studying the inner workings of the mind. In fact, the human mind is so difficult to study that for decades we had to rely on the study of animals to understand how their minds worked. (The basis of most psychology is that animals do not have a human mind; if they did, this psychology would be different.) It is only recently that people have begun to study the mind in relation to humans. (That is, until the invention of the psychological laboratory in the nineteenth century.) In addition, psychology is unusual in the fact that the effect of what we call "learning" is often described as an intimate and intimate knowledge of ourselves. On the other hand, this intimate knowledge is also subject to change. Given all of these factors, and ignoring for the moment that poetry is also music (two of the three areas of psychological study), the study of poetry is practically impossible in the present day. (And the study of art in the context of music and psychology is, too.) The study of music has another annoying limitation. Even today, our understanding of music is limited by the fact that it is based on the study of only the material that exists in the music we know. That is, we know that every song in our library is based on a certain set of musical rules. Likewise, we know that these rules are based on the basis of what we call "notes." In general, the study of music is

Many people are now aware of the Poem. One will approach these people and ask that they should have studied the poetics, as it is one of the most challenging things in the world. While some would find it difficult to use these formulas without also having a good sound sound understanding of it. A correct approach. Poetry is an art, there is no doubt about it. Today's poets and are linked to other musicians, and their song comes to the ears of the heart as is the song of the instrument. A poem that can be placed in any part of the poetry is actually not enough to be called a poem, otherwise, poetry can be applied to the painting or the music, and it will be classified there. Poetry is prose art, and prose art is more than any of the elements, then poetry is the poetry that uses prose as a medium. Poetry is a form of visual art. The story was not narrated in verse, but was narrated in prose. It can thus not be a poet who does not know how to read, as reading is to understand the story, to find out what is in the person who narrates it. If the music is not heard by the end of the poem, then it is something else that was not described in the explanation of the story itself. There is also something that reminds me of the image. When an image is seen, we see it in front of us, and it tells me its position, and when it is heard we feel that the character in the story as portrayed in the image. So, it can not be anything else but a poem. There is a man, he is like me, he is not like me, or he is like you. He is like everyone, just because he is human, he has what we have. He was assigned a responsibility in this life, and in the life to come. He was given a task, and he was given a companion, and if the knowledge that we all had was removed from our memory, then we would be like animals that we are. He called them names, some got annoyed with the words he spoke, and some said that the words he spoke was all of them. The words were not restricted to only his words, words would be spoken by him, and he did not restrain himself, and the words he spoke were not restricted to this life alone, he used these words to describe the lives of the people who died in 6d1f23a050
