T-cell prolymphocytic leukemia is a rare disease of mature T-lymphocytes with characteristic clinical and morphologic features. The disease usually occurs in middle-aged women with a median age at diagnosis of 55 years. B-symptoms and leukemic manifestations are uncommon. Anemia and thrombocytopenia are typical laboratory findings, and a benign clinical course is typical. Cytogenetic abnormalities are frequent. The disease has a poor response to chemotherapy, and the median survival is short. Transplantation has been performed with variable success. The clinical course is unique in that the disease may mimic chronic lymphocytic
