A: Since You're getting this message from some other app, I am assumming that You're getting this error message from network connections. In this case I can advice that You should be using [Docker][1] network driver instead of bridged driver. Default network driver in docker is host-only driver. In order to fix this, it is necessary to uninstall Docker. Try to follow [Docker][2] documentaion for this on uninstalling Docker. Animal, mineral and nuclear dangers from Fukushima Connections and pathways between the current Fukushima crisis, the radiation poisoning of sea mammals in British waters, the caesium contamination of North American food sources, and the global nuclear industry remain secret. Yet they are the keys to understanding the global nuclear catastrophe unfolding in the Japanese countryside today. All across the Pacific, people are dying as a result of official reluctance to address the dangers that the Japanese government now admits are beyond their control. After four years of official lies, Japan's Guardian newspaper broke the story this month that between 25,000 and 40,000 people are probably dying as a result of the earthquake and tsunami in March 2011, along with at least 4,000 who have died since then. This does not count the many more people who have already succumbed to cancer. This does not count the many more people who have already succumbed to cancer. In March 2011, the Japanese government lied to the world about the dangers that were realising at that time. It is clear now that radiation contamination of all sorts is a growing global health crisis. The chief nuclear and radiation expert from Harvard University, Dr. Theodore Brown, himself warned that: “Long-term food safety and the continued health and welfare of the current population ... all are seriously compromised.” The Japanese government’s lies were continued by the British government in April 2011, when it authorised the transport of Japanese cesium contaminated cattle to Europe. British representatives later admitted that they still don’t know where the radioactive dangerous
