the film is directed by famous filmmaker shoojit sircar, whose other notable works include dev.d, naseeb, and tacie & tuscie, and is produced by maask, which has been a tv channel on the star india network for almost 10 years. the crime drama, set in chicago, features appearances by a number of well-known bollywood stars, including actor atul kulkarni, who also plays the part of a detective. the film, largely in english, was made in india at a budget of about $1 million, using a combination of mostly established bollywood stars and chicago-based professionals for the roles. the film is based on the true story of a real fake cop named 'van nair,' who impersonated a police inspector for a few years. while it is true that chaalis chauraasi is a colourful film, with beautiful women from all walks of life, i still feel that the film could have perhaps been more like ek thi daayan by anurag kashyap. the film could have been characterised with a heart wrenching message. for instance it could have been a bhavishya(mission) movie. in an event like happy new year, the police is there to ensure that people are not killed, maimed or robbed. happy new year is also a very bhavishya (mission) movie and to an extent pardes also proves to be one. one that sets right the wrongs. one with a message to spread. one that teaches people not to jump to conclusions. one that teaches us to empathise with each others problems, and to realise that the person beside us may be yourself. bhavishya movies may not have mass appeal. but there are certain films that stand apart from the crowd and give a glimpse of humanity and the hope for better lives.
