I counsel study.Short-term outcomes after carotid artery stenting in patients with severe stenoses: predictors of high-grade restenosis and carotid artery occlusion. Cervical carotid artery stenosis causes stroke in up to 10% of all stroke patients. Carotid endarterectomy reduces stroke incidence in severe stenoses ($\approx 50\%$: amount of stenosis ($P=0.045$), presence of restenosis on the contralateral side ($P=0.005$), collateral flow ($P=0.038$), and type of stent ($P=0.045$). The following were independent predictors of restenosis in patients treated with a carotid stent for primary carotid stenosis: age ($P=0.033$), stent type ($P=0.021$), and internal carotid artery occlusion ($P=0.039$). Our data show that patients with severe carotid stenoses have a high risk for restenosis and occlusion if PCT is performed. They suggest that the type of stent, the pre-existing restenosis, and the collateral flow should be taken into consideration when performing PCT. 5ec8ef588b
