and when it gets to the bad-ass-to-the-max final with both paul and lugo standing on a rocket, watching it blast off into the sky, and the rockets actually blasting away, that is the kind of bay you have to understand, people who dont get that, who dont know what the hell the coen brothers are up to, are going to have a very, very hard time understanding this movie. it is a superhero movie, and it is a superhero movie that is so dizzyingly silly and rides the line of the psychologically profound quite a bit that its appeal goes way beyond the superhero thing. its a movie about the human condition, and it shows how you can manufacture artificial heroism and make good use of it. and its like that across the board, the characters are much more human than youd think, the worst characters are shockingly sympathetic, the people who seem to have no redeeming quality are often people who have done a lot of bad, and as they do they recognize themselves in the characters and that pushes them even further to the dark side, the government people and the criminals are not wholly evil, theyve made terrible mistakes, but theyre also human and with the right incentive theyre willing to put their lives in danger to save the world. it is an odd movie, and its a very different movie from what you expect, it doesnt fit anywhere. and its the same thing with the music. most bay movies have an underlying sense of melancholy, and this one is laughing its head off, but its the kind of laugh you have when the world is about to end. the autokey is not much of a feature, by the way. its merely another method of organizing and archiving your files, using a neat, flat, file system. in the future, i will probably add a section describing why it is no longer needed. so far, i have not found a way to use it without using the autokey window, and there is really no need for that. use the autokey if you like it, but do not use the autokey to organize your files.
