the numbers also used to be stamped on the back of the body just above the nut, but since the 1970s, serial numbers have been found on the edge of the body near the bridge, or on the end of the headstock just below the headstock logo. the serial number on the neck heel of a new bass can be used to date the instrument, but this is not a definitive method to identify the date of an instrument. an instrument will typically have two or three serial numbers. the first serial number is usually a letter and a number, and will be visible on the back of the neck where the headstock meets the neck. the serial number used in this location is the earliest date on the instrument. the second serial number is usually the same letter and number, but this time it will be located on the headstock, near the top of the headstock, and will be in the same area as the headstock logo. the third serial number is used when the instrument has two or more serial numbers, which is an indication that it was upgraded during production. the headstock number is typically the last number used. fender uses this number as the last production number to identify a single instrument. the headstock number is typically a number and is located on the headstock. it was first used on the stratocaster in 1958. serial numbers used to be stamped in various locations on the body. the numbers were used from 1958 to 1968 and were typically in the same location as the headstock and neck number. the numbers are usually numbers and a small letter. from 1957 to 1959, the numbers were on the back of the body between the bridge and the pickup. from 1960 to 1968, the numbers were located on the face of the body near the bridge. from 1959 to 1960, the numbers were located on the front of the body below the headstock logo.

Fender Precision Bass Serial Number Guide

Fender began stamping serial numbers on the metal plate on the back of the body in 1954. This serial number range is appropriate for dating Stratocasters, Telecasters, Jazzmasters from 1958 onward, and Jaguars from 1962 on. Remember that the plates are easily swapped for another plate using only a screwdriver, so it's only the first step in dating a vintage Fender guitar. If your neck plate has a serial number with more than six digits then it was not made in the 1950s or 1960s. Some of the earliest Stratocasters have a four digit serial number on the white plastic tremolo plate cover on the back of the body. I am looking for Fender guitars in the following serial number range so you can contact me here to sell a Fender guitar. The chart below details Fender serial number schemes used from 1950 to 1964. Notice that there is quite a bit of overlap in numbers and years. The only way to try to narrow the date range of your specific instrument is to remove the neck and check the butt end of the neck heel for a production date, which may be stamped or written there (if you're uncomfortable doing this yourself, please refer to an experienced professional guitar tech in your area). Take a look at the picture taken in my sauna and you will notice I am a creature of habit. That is the third Orange Tabby I have lived with named Sherman and anyone who has ever talked to me about guitars quickly learns that I have a collection of red E series Made in Japan Fender Telecasters. What does that mean When were they made The good folks at Fender compiled a list to guide us in the general build dates of these cool instruments. When was yours made 5ec8ef588b
