the abuse of crack cocaine or its use is otherwise documented, an electrodiagnostic test may be helpful to rule out carpal tunnel syndrome. The combination of heroin, cocaine, and Fentanyl is now used more frequently due to its enhanced euphoric experience; however, in an effort to make the drug more potent, additional ingredients are now added to the mix. The ratio varies based on the dealer, but the ratios will typically range from 1:3 to 2:1 (heroin/cocaine). The result of this is increased intoxication and reduced danger of overdose. Fentanyl is an analgesic which can be injected as a relatively pure form, it can be mixed with heroin or cocaine with unaltered effects, or it can be mixed with other drugs, such as carfentanil or methadone. Cocaine is typically added to the mix along with other drugs to increase its euphoric effect and to decrease its cost for the user.
