If you arent driving regularly, you might not realize that the weather can cause all kinds of damage to your car. If you were driving in winter at a particular place, you might have noticed snow buildup that got heavier and heavier until your windshield started cracking. If you see a sudden and extreme increase in debris or snow buildup, you might want to get it fixed right away, or at least as soon as possible so that it doesnt get worse. This could mean a big time investment in repair, depending on the size of the crack. So, make sure that you call a professional to tell them about the problem before they get started fixing the windshield. Heres another scenario you might encounter. Sometimes, you might have some kind of problem that can make your windshield crack, but when you put on your car, it magically goes away. You shouldnt pay too much attention to this phenomenon, because it might actually be a mechanic trick to make you forget about the crack. Usually, the mechanic will fix it for you, if theyre not the one who put it on the first place. If you noticed that the crack seems to go away as soon as you get inside your car, make sure to tell the mechanic about it. Theyll happily take care of it. The more you play, the more the cracks and chip marks on your windshield will appear. You may have to pay some cash if the cracks are really big, and you might have to replace your windshield if the damage is too severe. Its actually really important to tell your mechanic the minute you notice a new crack on your windshield. Chances are that theres another chip or a crack on your windshield that they havent noticed. Bring a picture of the windshield, so that they can see it for themselves. 5ec8ef588b
