Method of interconnecting physically disparate devices to exchange information over a data communication network is know as networking. One of the uses of networking is networking a computer and its peripherals to enable exchange of information. In order to exchange information with a computer, the peripheral device must be networked to the computer using one or more of the various protocols that have been developed to exchange information between a computer and one or more peripheral devices. Examples of the protocols include the simple connection line protocol ("Serial Line Data Transport", also known as SSDL, short for Serial Data Link), the peripheral computer interface ("PCI", short for Peripheral Computer Interface) bus of the Peripheral Component Interconnect ("PCI") family of protocols, IEEE 1394 parallel bus and Ethernet bus protocols, infra-red communication and other protocols. While there are a number of different protocols, each protocol has its own advantages and disadvantages.
