now, this is what the stronger episodes are all about. and its a 2-parter, which gives us two 2-hour episodes in one, unlike the usual 3-parter. i know, because i watched it like that. i had a lot of issues with the regular episodes, and was really happy with this one. it was such a powerful thing to say goodbye to the riders, and even more powerful for the follow up to show us how they lived on in the present day, with their families and their feelings about how the series ended. it was also nice to see the show develop and change in terms of the main cast. of course, there were still some problems to be had with stuff like the ending, but i think that was part of the point, to present the riders in a new light. so the huge finale is here, and oh boy do i have some opinions on this one. while i may have been a little more enthused when the series was ending back in 2002, i dont think i would have been as enthusiastic in the later years. the series was always flimsy, and i think that the move to the present day allowed the show to get away with a lot more. its almost as if the rider character, his relationships, and the relationship between the main characters and the riders is a little bit less there. its hard to say though, as to whether that was a good thing or not, because it wouldnt be hard to see that being a major change in what they were doing. and it wasnt. however, its also worth noting that, even though they had more leeway and freedom to do things, this series wasnt exactly perfect either. it was prone to cheap jokes, awful dialogue, and so on. but it was a great ride, one that i wouldnt mind having back again. as for the finale, the first thing that comes to mind is the whole cel animation style, which was done again for kyoraku in the finale of the stronger series. the difference this time is that the animation style isnt just there for the sake of it, and fits in well with the scene. in particular, i think the scene where the ryusoulgers go to the dinoknights to stop them from destroying the world is done well, as is the scene where they go to confront kyoraku and his followers in the temple. the last part is where things go awry, however, as the dinoknights turn into their true selves, and we end up with the main cast, and the riders, fighting against the dinoknights. and thats just silly. it looks good, but its just not very much fun. 5ec8ef588b
