thirteen students and staff from the university of bath, the university of northampton and the university of warwick travelled to india to undertake a short study tour in calcutta. the program focussed on the colonial and post-colonial heritage of the city and the impact of india's current economic policy. an enhanced version of the five-day study tour has been developed with the support of a generous grant from the hull university school of history. in addition to the original lectures, students were involved in guided trips to sites such as the esplanade and the high court of calcutta. students not only examined the impact of the foreign presence in calcutta, but also marked the 50th anniversary of the famous 'glimmer of hope' speech by its last governor, lord radcliffe. this iicsa honours thesis examines the normalization of the taliban in afghanistan and its impact on the reconstruction process and the future of the country. it shows that the taliban had been politically marginalized and a threat to the reconstruction of the country but that the threat had been turned around.

it has discussed the situation and the challenges now faced. whether or not the current government of afghanistan can successfully address the challenges remains to be seen. the purpose of the current study is to document the experience and interaction of rural and urban peasants with the land tenure system in the arab world in general and saudi arabia in particular. the study focused on three provinces in saudi arabia, namely in the central region of al ahsa, the eastern region of khujair and the western region of haradh. the research covered the land ownership system and its development, the rights of women in land ownership and in land inheritance. the study involved in-depth semi-structured interviews of peasant families and their discussion of land rights and management. interviews were carried out in arabic. the objective of the study was to gain an insight into the true nature and change of the current land tenure system and its impact on the way peasants live in rural communities. the study also sought to understand how the state of mind is to the impact of the land tenure system on the peasant as a whole.
