In addition to getting the full version with all the updates, you can also download separate components. So even if you only need After Effects for certain features, you can still get the best possible version. You can download just the individual features you need, or you can get the entire suite for a nice discount. Adobe After Effects now supports ProRes 422, HEVC (H.265), and HEIF (Apple Intermediate Codec) formats, enabling you to import media such as 4K DCI footage and HEIC (iOS 10) images. You can also export to these formats from the open codecs included with After Effects. For more information, read the appendix in the new ProRes 422, HEVC, and HEIF manual. After Effects now supports the brand new native Apple M1 series Mac Pro machines, with up to 12 cores and 24 threads. Framerate lock now selects the full number of cores and threads available for use. If a composition is too long to fit on a single core, it now uses all cores and threads available to speed up rendering. Two new tools help beginners get started with After Effects: a new Magic Wand tool in the new Layer and Channels panel and a new type of layer clip. Magic Wand and the new Layer and Channels panel now work with the new XYZ stack. With native support for Apple silicon, After Effects now runs twice as fast on M1 computers and up to three times faster on M1 Ultra Macs compared to previous generation systems. Adobe Sensei machine learning features, like Roto Brush 2 and new Scene Edit Detection are faster. and playback is also smoother: for example, EXR decoding is two times faster and ProRes decoding is up to four times faster on new M1 Ultra Macs versus previous high-end models.

You can work with a pirated version of After Effects for a long time, but it is not updated to the latest version. More often than not, the pirated versions also do not have the latest bug fixes. Therefore, it is more dangerous for your computer than using the licensed and working product. Sometimes working with pirated versions is a risk to your computer. It may be infected by Trojan viruses, which are loaded and downloaded in your computer at any time and placed in the registry of your operating system as false registrations. Add to this the probable corruption of the operating system, it is quite possible that the antivirus program will identify the file as a virus and remove it.
