High Rate of Prolonged QTc Interval in Patients With Neuroendocrine Tumors Treated With Somatostatin Analogs. Patients with neuroendocrine tumors (NETs) treated with somatostatin analogs (SSAs) may have QTc prolongation. The prevalence and duration of QTc prolongation in patients with NETs treated with SSAs has not been fully elucidated. To assess the prevalence and duration of QTc interval prolongation in patients with NETs treated with SSAs. Retrospective chart review. A tertiary medical center. Patients with NETs (n = 89; 43 men, 46 women; mean age, 58.4 years) treated with SSAs at the Surgical Division, Department of General Surgery, Medical University of Graz, Austria, from January 1, 2006, to December 31, 2014. All patients were treated with SSAs. QTc interval prolongation was defined as a corrected QTc interval of >470 ms. In 89 patients with NETs treated with SSAs, the prevalence of prolonged QTc interval was 21.3% (n = 20/89). The maximum QTc interval was 644.0 ms. Prolonged QTc interval was observed in 13 patients (14.6%) before treatment with SSAs, in 4 patients (4.5%) during treatment with SSAs, and in 3 patients (3.3%) after treatment with SSAs. The mean time to first observed QTc interval prolongation was 10.3 ± 19.1 days. The mean time to return to normal QTc interval was 47.8 ± 25.2 days. Prolonged QTc interval was found in patients with NETs, even in the absence of preexisting QTc interval abnormalities.
