Aurora-class amphibious warship The Aurora-class amphibious warship was a class of five warships of the Imperial Japanese Navy during World War II. The class was named after the Aurora Borealis.

Background The Imperial Japanese Navy (IJN) was assigned to undertake amphibious operations, even in the face of a United States naval blockade. In 1941, the Japanese sought to reinforce bases in Southeast Asia, and to train a force that could be deployed either to the eastern or western Asiatic coast. To this end, the Japanese Naval General Staff (JNS) established an amphibious and landing forces school at Kure, Japan, in November 1940. At the time the IJN only had two landing vessels: the seaplane tender and a former 79a2804d6b
