Collective social behavior in (porcine) endothelial cells and its modulation. Endothelial cells (EC) function in concert with other cells to regulate the blood flow to organs and tissues. While EC are considered as passive interfaces between the blood and the vessel wall, it is becoming increasingly clear that they have an active role as cell participants in the development of vascular pathologies. In this context, the influence of shear stress on EC is of particular interest, because high shear stress is thought to be the trigger for the development of atherosclerotic lesions. In this work, a detailed experimental analysis was performed on the influence of shear stress on the formation of endothelial cell-based structures as well as on the expression levels of various proteins that are important for vascular function. The results obtained are important not only for the understanding of endothelial cell biology, but also for future research. A pilot study on the clinical effectiveness of a computerized decision aid to reduce prescription of antibiotics for children with otitis media in primary care. The main objective of the study was to evaluate the clinical effectiveness of a computerized decision aid to reduce prescriptions of antibiotics in children with
