She barely mentions her pregnancy in the next scene but cuts away to any female heartburn. Third-degree perineal tears, especially the rare Dubowitz variant of pregnant uterus: A case report. Even though vaginal delivery is preferred, C-section is performed more commonly for this case, due to the fact that the perineum is approximately 1.5 cm above the mons pubis, and sometimes it is injured during forceps or vacuum extraction. Third-degree lacerations extend to the perineum in any variant except the Dubowitz type of perineal trauma, which has only two variants: 1) perineal tears of less than 1/3 of the circumference, and 2) rupture of the transverse and oblique perineal muscles. These two variants are quite rare in pregnancy, and when they occur together, the result is serious injury to the perineum. The first case of a Dubowitz variant of perineal trauma, and the rare and complicated pregnancy and labor in this patient are reported.
