We report a very unusual presentation of eosinophilic folliculitis: an appearance of bullous skin lesions. A 63-year-old woman presented with multifocal follicular erythematous papules and pustules on her lower legs. The clinical features were those of a polymorphic folliculitis, such as those of drug eruption, contact dermatitis, folliculitis decalvans or pseudolymphomatous folliculitis. An extensive work-up, including specific investigations for parasite or bacteria and histological examination, failed to show the origin of the lesions. Only after a skin biopsy specimen revealed widespread subepidermal bullae filled by eosinophilic infiltrates, the diagnosis of bullous eosinophilic pustular folliculitis was made. The lesions resolved rapidly after the discontinuation of a sulfonamide compound she was taking for a pulmonary illness. General Information General Information Within the Academy the following are listed alphabetically. Concussions It is a common misconception that concussions can lead to permanent brain damage, causing people who have had a concussion, to be excluded from athletics. This is simply untrue. In fact, people with a concussion, just like anyone
