Rocky Mountain Ramblers The Rocky Mountain Ramblers (or RMR) were a country music band which blended in elements of blues and folk with traditional country music to create a "unique mix of rock and country". Formed in Fort Collins, Colorado in 1974, the band was active until they disbanded in 1979. History The RMR were formed by Frank Sullivant, a long-time friend of Tompall Glaser. The three original members were Sullivant on guitar and vocals, Glaser on lead guitar, and Jeff Glover on bass. After recording and releasing a self-produced album titled History Lesson in 1975, the band performed sporadic shows over the next two years. Their fourth album, Jambalaya, was released in 1978 on Frontier Records. In 1978, Frontier recorded a track from the upcoming album, "Been There Long Time," which was released as a single by the label in late 1978. The song was the first collaboration between Glaser and Sullivant. The single rose to number 33 on the country charts in March 1979. The band continued to perform in small clubs in the Denver area, including the original Larimer Lounge in downtown, and by 1979 the RMR were playing clubs such as the Red Dog Saloon in Arvada, Colorado, and on the road. After a final show on August 24, 1979, the band dissolved. Glover went on to form the band the Corsairs with his brothers Earl and Hoyt and cousin Pee Wee. Glaser, Sullivant and bassist Dick Richards went on to form Big Mama's, a rockabilly band, which, along with the Nashville band the Left Banke, toured the east coast in the late 1980s.
